

Amy "Hetty" Reckless

Amy "Hetty" Reckless (1793-1881) was enslaved by one of Salem County's wealthiest families, but took matters into her own hands to liberate herself and her children. She was the daughter of Dorcas Boadley, who belonged to Jane Gibbon Johnson. Her son, Col. Robert Gibbon Johnson assumed ownership of Hetty, and she lived as one of his servants in Johnson Hall (now 90 Market Street). Julianna Zantinger, Johnson's second wife was exceptionally cruel and is noted to have "knocked out [Hetty's] front teeth with a broomstick and yanked out tufts of her hair."

Tired of this treatment, Hetty Reckless boarded a stagecoach with her child and traveled to Philadelphia, seeking refuge with the Abolition Society. Col. Johnson sought for her return, but she refused. While in Philadelphia, she became a founding member of the Philadelphia Female Anti-Slavery Society, as well as a member of the Black Female Vigilant Association. She even operated a safe house for the Underground Railroad on Rodman Street in Philadelphia. While Hetty worked tirelessly against slavery, she was also concerned about women's rights and sexual exploitation. In 1845, she and Hetty Burr cofounded the Moral Reform Retreat, a shelter for African American Women in Philadelphia.

She moved back to Salem in 1850, living just a short distance from Johnson Hall on Market Street. She continued her anti-slavery efforts, working with Abigail Goodwin. Abigail Goodwin noted the value of Hetty's efforts in that she raised $17 dollars for fugitive clothing, more than anyone else had. Hetty lived a long and full life of 105 years. One of her treasured possessions at the time of her death was a flag "inscribed with strong language expressive of the sentiments of anti-slavery workers."

Spring 2022

Hi! My name is Alyssa Caltabiano and I am the new Director of Tourism and Cultural Affairs for Salem County. I have worked exclusively in the Salem County tourism sector and have a passion for all things local. With a background in history, a passion for the arts, and an interest in local agriculture, I am so excited to be promoting all that our county has to offer. You can reach me at Alyssa.Caltabiano@salemcountynj.gov or 865-935-7510 x8384. I would love to hear from you and connect!

This will be the new newsletter for the Office of Cultural Affairs and Tourist Information Services! Salem County has lot's to offer this Spring! We are moving into a season of growth with new business opportunities, an influx of new residents, and increased funding for our arts and history sector. Whether you're from the area or are visiting, you should find no shortage of things to do this upcoming season!
